Submission to the Review of Pharmacy Remuneration and Regulation

I am writing not in support of the review and not in support of this choice being taken away from consumers.

There are many things that are dangerous in this world. The use of over-the-counter homeopathic remedies and nutritional supplements is not generally one of them. I do agree to more stringent guidelines for the over the counter nutritional supplements that are sold in terms of their efficacy and therapeutic doses and I do think this should be regulated or there should be an informed person on staff to provide information.

As for the homeopathic remedies, which have helped many people that I know. From babies to the elderly. To take away the option to try these products that will do no harm, is unthinkable.

Paracetamol can be toxic if taken in overdose! Should we consider removing that from the shelves of the pharmacies? There will be no harm caused if the homeopathic remedies are taken in overdose!

I believe that these natural remedies can be used effectively side-by-side with pharmaceutical drugs. I believe that we should keep this service going for consumers.

Yours Truly
