

Review of Pharmacy Remuneration and Regulation
#163_ANON-58KW-N5NC-3

I am voicing my objection to the King Review report that homeopathic products should not be sold in Australian Pharmacies.

In the United Kingdom, The Royal London Hospital for Integrated Medicine - formerly The Royal London Homeopathic Hospital - offers clinical services including complementary cancer treatment, allergy services, acupuncture, homeopathy, rheumatology, weight loss management and sleep management all under The National Health Service.

In a modern society the populace should be free to decide their own healthcare. If the King Review is concerned about the health of the people of Australia it might better recommend that cigarettes, alcohol and junk food should not be sold. From my experience homeopathic products do not have health consequences in stark contrast to cigarettes, alcohol and junk food.

Dr James Latto

MBChB